

Stepping Out Review 8/2/07

Richard Harris' play is set in a dingy church hall where a group of would-be dancers turn up for their weekly tap dancing classes led by Mavis (Heidi Ashton), accompanied by the formidable North Country woman Mrs Fraser (Lorraine Willis), whose sense of rhythm was often sadly lacking!

Still, this didn't matter much, as most members of the group demonstrated scant lack of musical coordination.

In fact, dancing took second place to the socialising, where, prompted mainly by Sylva (a delightful characterisation by Alexandra Willis) and egged on by a worldly-wise Maxine (Sian Ellmes) bitchy comments about other members of the group flew about
